What is the Big Picture Design?

- Students pursue their passions
- They do internships in the community two days a week
- They design real, complex projects for learning
- They learn from adult mentors
- They present their learning via exhibition
- They are focused on their futures
- Families are involved in school and in their children's learning

What work is Big Picture doing in Australia?

- We are creating Big Picture schools and academies
- We are sharing our research, learning, programs and tools
- We are negotiating new pathways with universities
- We are advocating with governments
- We are working with education departments and curriculum authorities
- We are collaborating with other not-for-profit companies and organisations around innovation

We rely on the support of members to continue this important work.

Big Picture Education Australia is part of the Big Picture Learning International Network.

INTERNATIONAL NETWORK

20 years in the United States

Big Picture Learning began in the USA in 1995 and has since spread across the globe.

10 years in Australia

Big Picture Education Australia was established in 2005 as a not-for-profit company. Over 40 Australian schools in urban, regional and remote communities work with us to implement the Big Picture design for learning and school.

Why join Big Picture Education Australia?

"I support the network because they offer such a relevant approach to education. Big Picture has helped my son feel like part of something and given him direction in life. I've been really happy to be involved in Kyle's schooling and I love seeing his presentations and portfolios."

Belinda, Parent,
Halls Head College

"Our school joined because I want my staff to have access to the best thinking about education from around the world. We get that with Big Picture Education. We also get discounts on Big Picture services and training."

Chad Bliss, Principal, Canobolas
Rural Technology High School

"I watched students slip through the cracks over the years, not caring about what they were doing and not prepared for life after year 12. I was searching for a better way for students to learn and found it in Big Picture. Now I'm a member because I want to be part of the solution."

Brendt Evenden, Educator,
Cooks Hill Campus
